《Don't Let [ⓐ Anger / ⓑ Calmness] Be Your Boss》 Do you ever find yourself suddenly feeling [ⓐ pleased / ⓑ angry]? One moment you're [ⓐ distressed / ⓑ fine], and the next moment you're slamming doors or rolling your eyes at your parents. Some people may think you just have a [ⓐ bad / ⓑ good] attitude or are getting too upset about a [ⓐ large / ⓑ small] problem. However, these feelings don't simply come from stress about everyday life. 《Where does adolescent [ⓐ anger / ⓑ tranquility] come from?》 As a teen, you may feel like an [ⓐ child / ⓑ adult], but your brain is still growing. In your brain, there is a part that is responsible for solving problems and controlling your [ⓐ apathy / ⓑ emotions]. In your teen years, this part is still in development. The changes in your brain lead you toward [ⓐ independence / ⓑ dependence], social engagement, and [ⓐ creativity / ⓑ monotony]. At the same time, however, you may feel [ⓐ certain / ⓑ confused] about who you are. You may also be more [ⓐ sensitive / ⓑ indifferent] to unfairness. Furthermore, your body is flowing with hormones. This significantly affects your [ⓐ indifference / ⓑ mood]. The combination of these factors [ⓐ diminishes / ⓑ intensifies] your [ⓐ weak / ⓑ strong] emotions.

02

《Getting to Know Your Anger》 It is [ⓐ natural / ⓑ unnatural] to feel angry from time to time; it doesn't mean there is something [ⓐ wrong / ⓑ right] with you. Anger can sometimes be a [ⓐ useful / ⓑ useless] tool. For example, an angry but open conversation can [ⓐ resolve / ⓑ exacerbate] a conflict between friends. The important thing is to [ⓐ manage / ⓑ neglect] your anger so that it does not turn into aggressive or violent behavior. This does not mean that you should [ⓐ encourage / ⓑ stop] yourself from feeling angry. Rather, you should express it in a [ⓐ unproductive / ⓑ productive] way. Ask yourself some questions about your angry feelings. This can help you to better [ⓐ misunderstand / ⓑ understand] your anger. 《Questions to Ask Yourself》 How [ⓐ often / ⓑ seldom] do I feel angry? What situations make me feel the most [ⓐ mild / ⓑ intense] anger? Is my anger directed at anyone or anything in [ⓐ particular / ⓑ general]? Do I focus on the causes of my anger instead of [ⓐ solutions / ⓑ problems]? Can I [ⓐ control / ⓑ lose] my emotions when I get angry? How do I [ⓐ ignore / ⓑ react] and behave when I get angry?

Q3

《First Aid to Calm Yourself Down》 You need to learn how to deal with [ⓐ tranquility / ⓑ anger] in a socially appropriate way. Remember: [ⓐ calmness / ⓑ anger] is a feeling, but behavior is a choice. The first step is recognizing the physical signs of [ⓐ serenity / ⓑ anger]. It is possible to recognize those signs in [ⓐ advance / ⓑ hindsight]. They include an [ⓐ increased / ⓑ diminished] heart rate, a [ⓐ flushed / ⓑ pale] face, and the clenching of your fists. When these things happen, take action to [ⓐ exacerbate / ⓑ reduce] your [ⓐ anger / ⓑ composure]. For example, you could try taking a break to [ⓐ organize / ⓑ scatter] your thoughts or ending a conversation before it gets too [ⓐ mild / ⓑ intense].

Q4

《Finding Proper Coping Skills》 In some cases, the strategies mentioned above may not be enough, so you may need to find [ⓐ inappropriate / ⓑ proper] coping skills for your [ⓐ impersonal / ⓑ personal] situation. Without the [ⓐ right / ⓑ wrong] coping skills, you may find yourself becoming verbally or even physically [ⓐ aggressive / ⓑ passive]. Explore various strategies to discover what is [ⓐ worst / ⓑ best] for you, such as taking a walk, drawing a picture, or writing down things that come to your mind. You can also try to find [ⓐ impossible / ⓑ possible] solutions to a problem and then compare the [ⓐ disadvantages / ⓑ advantages] and [ⓐ disadvantages / ⓑ advantages] of each one. By developing problem-solving skills, you will learn that there are many ways to solve a problem without getting [ⓐ angry / ⓑ calm]. Anger is an emotion that we all experience. By managing your anger properly, you can be the [ⓐ boss / ⓑ subordinate] of your feelings, not the other way around. This is an [ⓐ trivial / ⓑ important] step in finding your [ⓐ false / ⓑ true] self and taking control of your life.

《Don't Let [ⓐ Rage / ⓑ Composure] Be Your Boss》 Do you ever find yourself suddenly feeling [ⓐ furious / ⓑ delighted]? One moment you're fine, and the next moment you're slamming doors or rolling your eyes at your parents. Some people may think you just have a bad [ⓐ demeanor / ⓑ courtesy] or are getting too [ⓐ composed / ⓑ agitated] about a small [ⓐ dilemma / ⓑ solution]. However, these feelings don't simply come from [ⓐ relaxation / ⓑ pressure] about everyday life. 《Where does adolescent anger come from?》 As a teen, you may feel like an adult, but your brain is still growing. In your brain, there is a part that is responsible for solving [ⓐ challenges / ⓑ simplicities] and controlling your [ⓐ feelings / ⓑ stoicism]. In your teen years, this part is still in [ⓐ formation / ⓑ completion]. The changes in your brain lead you toward [ⓐ dependence / ⓑ autonomy], social engagement, and [ⓐ conformity / ⓑ innovation]. At the same time, however, you may feel [ⓐ enlightened / ⓑ perplexed] about who you are. You may also be more [ⓐ indifferent / ⓑ responsive] to unfairness. Furthermore, your body is flowing with hormones. This significantly affects your [ⓐ temperament / ⓑ stability]. The combination of these factors intensifies your strong emotions.

02

《Getting to Know Your [ⓐ Rage / ⓑ Calmness]》 It is natural to feel [ⓐ furious / ⓑ delighted] from time to time; it doesn't mean there is something [ⓐ amiss / ⓑ correct] with you. Anger can sometimes be a useful [ⓐ hindrance / ⓑ instrument]. For example, an angry but open conversation can [ⓐ settle / ⓑ exacerbate] a conflict between friends. The important thing is to [ⓐ neglect / ⓑ handle] your anger so that it does not turn into aggressive or violent behavior. This does not mean that you should stop yourself from feeling angry. Rather, you should express it in a [ⓐ destructive / ⓑ constructive] way. Ask yourself some [ⓐ responses / ⓑ inquiries] about your angry feelings. This can help you to better [ⓐ misinterpret / ⓑ comprehend] your anger. 《Questions to Ask Yourself》 How often do I feel angry? What situations make me feel the most [ⓐ mild / ⓑ severe] anger? Is my anger directed at anyone or anything in particular? Do I focus on the [ⓐ effects / ⓑ origins] of my anger instead of [ⓐ remedies / ⓑ problems]? Can I [ⓐ unleash / ⓑ regulate] my emotions when I get angry? How do I [ⓐ ignore / ⓑ respond] and behave when I get angry?

03

《First Aid to Calm Yourself Down》 You need to learn how to deal with [ⓐ rage / ⓑ composure] in a socially appropriate way. Remember: anger is a [ⓐ emotion / ⓑ indifference], but behavior is a [ⓐ compulsion / ⓑ decision]. The first step is recognizing the physical signs of anger. It is possible to recognize those signs in advance. They include an increased heart rate, a flushed face, and the clenching of your fists. When these things happen, take [ⓐ inaction / ⓑ measures] to reduce your anger. For example, you could try taking a break to [ⓐ jumble / ⓑ arrange] your thoughts or ending a [ⓐ monologue / ⓑ discussion] before it gets too [ⓐ heated / ⓑ mild].

04

《Finding Proper Coping Skills》 In some cases, the [ⓐ approaches / ⓑ retreats] mentioned above may not be enough, so you may need to find proper coping skills for your personal [ⓐ generality / ⓑ circumstance]. Without the right coping skills, you may find yourself becoming verbally or even physically [ⓐ hostile / ⓑ docile]. Explore various strategies to discover what is best for you, such as taking a walk, drawing a picture, or writing down things that come to your [ⓐ intellect / ⓑ ignorance]. You can also try to find possible [ⓐ resolutions / ⓑ complications] to a problem and then compare the [ⓐ detriments / ⓑ benefits] and [ⓐ merits / ⓑ drawbacks] of each one. By developing problem-solving skills, you will learn that there are many ways to solve a problem without getting [ⓐ furious / ⓑ delighted]. Anger is an [ⓐ sentiment / ⓑ indifference] that we all experience. By managing your anger properly, you can be the [ⓐ controller / ⓑ subordinate] of your [ⓐ emotions / ⓑ apathy], not the other way around. This is an important [ⓐ regression / ⓑ measure] in finding your true self and taking control of your life.

Do you ever find yourself suddenly feeling angry? One moment you're fine, and the next moment you're slamming doors or rolling your eyes at your parents. Some people may think you just have a bad attitude or are getting too upset about a small problem. However, these feelings don't simply come from stress about everyday life.

Where does adolescent anger come from?

As a teen, you may feel like an adult, but your brain is still growing. In your brain, there is a part that is responsible for solving problems and controlling your emotions. In your teen years, this part is still in development. The changes in your brain lead you toward independence, social engagement, and creativity. At the same time, however, you may feel confused about who you are. You may also be more sensitive to unfairness. Furthermore, your body is flowing with hormones. This significantly affects your mood. The combination of these factors intensifies your strong emotions.

① Some people may mistakenly think that a teen's anger is just a bad attitude.
② A teenager's brain is fully developed, just like an adult's brain.
③ Brain development during adolescence helps teens become more independent and creative.
④ Adolescents are often more sensitive to unfairness.
⑤ Hormonal changes have a significant effect on a teenager's mood.

First Aid to Calm Yourself Down

You need to learn how to deal with anger in a socially appropriate way. Remember: anger is a feeling, but behavior is a choice. The first step is recognizing the physical signs of anger. It is possible to recognize those signs in advance. They include an increased heart rate, a flushed face, and the clenching of your fists. When these things happen, take action to reduce your anger. For example, you could try taking a break to organize your thoughts or ending a conversation before it gets too intense.

① People cannot control their behavior when they feel angry.
② Taking actions before anger escalates can help in managing emotions.
③ The best way to handle anger is to ignore its physical symptoms.
④ Ending a conversation in the middle always worsens a conflict situation.
⑤ A flushed face and an increased heart rate indicate a calm state.
